Alignment with School Readiness

In an effort to help children develop an increasing ability to understand and to use language to communicate, the grantee implemented a multi-generational approach to improve the language and literacy skills of children and families. Through a partnership with the Charles Touhey Foundation in Albany, New York, Head Start children and families living in the city of Albany received one book per child, per month. Families built home libraries and parents learned about literacy activities to do with their children. Grantee and Foundation staff worked together to create a list of culturally diverse and developmentally appropriate books. Monthly, teachers included the selected book in their lesson planning. For example, one book read in class was titled, I Love My Hair. Staff converted the dramatic play area of the classroom into a hair salon, and the class talked about how one child's hair differs from another's. Staff also welcomed families into the center once a month for a book-focused literacy event. For example, for the book Everyone Eats Rice, teachers shared with parents how to make rain sticks (shaker rhythm instruments) with rice and talked about recipes from different cultures using rice. The project resulted in 93 percent of the program's children going to kindergarten either achieving or exceeding expectations for academic readiness per the Teaching Strategies GOLD assessment results, which surpassed the program's goal of 90 percent. In addition, the Director stated parents shared how the program enhanced their own reading skills and given them more confidence to read to their children. Since 2006, the partnership has impacted over 4,200 Head Start children and their families by providing over 28,000 culturally diverse and developmentally appropriate books to support language and literacy.

Alignment with School Readiness

The grantee and three of its receiving school districts worked together to ensure blended Head Start and Universal Pre-Kindergarten (UPK) classrooms, and stand-alone UPK classrooms were consistent in how they prepared children for kindergarten. Albany City, Watervliet, and Green Island, New York school districts chose to implement the grantee's curriculum, the Creative Curriculum, and child assessment tool, Teaching Strategies GOLD, that were aligned with the Head Start Early Learning Outcomes Framework (HSELOF) and the New York State Early Learning Framework. The grantee and UPK classroom staff met monthly to discuss their plans to teach lesson themes, like animals and the All About Me child and family focus unit, take-home activities for parents, and kindergarten teacher expectations such as self-regulation skills. This partnership supported approximately 300 of the grantee's children's preparation for the transition to kindergarten through similar instruction, behavior expectations, and familiar surroundings.
